

HIRING KEY MANAGEMENT

Professor Ethan Mollick

 @emollick

 Wharton ONLINE
UNIVERSITY of PENNSYLVANIA

Hiring key management

- Who to hire
- How to hire

Roles

- Consider growing by “division”
- Know the danger of imprints
- List skills (functional, managerial, industry/domain)
- Sourcing:
  - “A” hires attract “A” hires

|                    |      | Specificity of Skills                  |                                      |
|--------------------|------|--|--------------------------------------|
|                    |      | High                                   | Low                                  |
| Prominence of Role | High | Headhunters go after competitors       | Advertise with good filters          |
|                    | Low  | You go after key people at competitors | Advertising, university visits, etc. |

Skills

- Differences between top and bottom hires are profound.

Networks – Diversity and depth

Hiring: Pre-interview

- Come up with a score-card based on roles
- Talk with other interviewers about what you will ask
  - Structure matters, have a formal approach
  - 3-5 interviews
- Consider screening to gather basic information
  - Lunch/phone call
  - Avoid homophily
- Assign pre-work*

Hiring: The interview

After the interview

- References should be important, but....
  - TORC (Threat of Reference Check)
  - “What will they say when I call them?”
- All interviewers make a go/no go decision based on scorecard
- Close hard

Conclusions

- Hiring is really important!
- Consider roles, skills, and networks
  - Roles – be wary of imprints, grow by division
  - Skills – the best and worst are very different. Use history to judge
  - Networks – Consider diversity and coverage

---

ONLINE